

1. Why are there war graves and memorials in Poland?

During both World Wars there was destructive fighting across Poland. Although British and Commonwealth forces never fought on Polish soil, you'll still find more than 1,250 war graves in five cemeteries across the country.

Many of these First and Second World War servicemen died in prisoner of war (POW) camps in Poland and eastern Germany. They include the 48 POWs who took part in the 'Great Escape', made famous by a Hollywood movie. After successfully breaking out, most were recaptured, and dozens were killed by their captors. Amongst our graves you'll see distinctive Polish headstones. These honour Polish servicemen who fought with the Allies and died as POWs. In total the CWGC cares for over 4,400 Polish graves worldwide.
